

I Love My Veggies Finger Puppet Story

Once upon a time, in a garden far far away, there lived a group of vegetables. There was corn, pepper, cucumber, broccoli, potato, and carrot. They all lived together in the same garden, but they never really talked to each other or spent time together.

One day, a big storm hit the garden and all the vegetables were scared. They huddled together and waited for the storm to pass. When the storm was over, they realized that they were all still alive and safe.

Corn spoke up and said, “we should all stick together and help each other out. We’re stronger when we’re together.” The other vegetables agreed, and they all started to work together.

Pepper used its spicy flavor to keep bugs away from the other vegetables. Cucumber provided water to keep everyone hydrated. Broccoli used its strong stalk to hold up the weaker vegetables. Potato dug deep into the ground to find nutrients for everyone. And carrot used its bright color to attract more sunlight.

Together, they all grew stronger and healthier. They even started to have fun together, telling jokes and sharing stories. They realized that they were different, but that’s what made them special.

And from that day on, they were known as the “Garden Squad”. They were the strongest, happiest, and healthiest vegetables in the garden. And they all lived happily ever after.

The end.
